Innovative Teaching Grants

Jake's Journey Inside a Cell

Mom asked the normal question, "What did you do at school today?" "I visited the inside of a cell!" shouted Jake, the unusually excited 6th grader. Jake is one of 400 students at Oakwood Intermediate that has explored health systems, visited zoos, discovered coral reefs, and even visited the International Space Station, through virtual reality goggles. The Google VR Goggles were provided through an innovative teaching grant from the CSISD Education Foundation. The grant project allows educators to take students on virtual expeditions -- in the body and across the universe. Teachers tell us that it engages students in the real world of science, and gets them excited about hands-on learning. Jake says, "I hope we get to see what the brain looks like next!"

COMPUTER SCIENCE

Hall of Fame & Scholarships

Shreya Succeeds at Stanford

“Before ninth grade, I thought it was weird for me, a girl, to be a scientist,” Shreya says. “I thought I could only be cool by playing sports. But high school spun me around 180 degrees (or pi radians). Technology is my passion. With the ability to build mobile apps and create software, I feel like I have the power to change the world.” Shreya received a 2015 CSISD Education Foundation Scholarship and is set to graduate from Stanford University May 2019. Graduating 11th in her high school class, she also held leadership roles in the Science Olympiad Team, Math Club, orchestra, SkillsUSA, and swimming which led her to be selected as a CSISD Hall of Fame honoree. She chose her computer science teacher Dianne Rister as her most influential educator who Shreya says “opened parts of education that I never knew existed.” This has led her to pursue a degree in computer science.
